Witness testifies in South Philly 'mob' slaying trial

Assassination? At a South Philly murder trial, each side portrayed wildly different views of the defendant.

Family members of a South Philadelphia man reputed to be linked to organized crime brought him dress shoes to wear during the preceding. But they were rebuffed.

So Anthony Nicodemo is facing murder charges wearing dress pants, a button-down shirt and white sneakers.

Prosecutors claim Nicodemo is guilty of first-degree murder for planning the 2012 slaying and then serving as getaway driver. They said Nicodemo's friend, who is not charged, was the shooter.

Witness Louis Houck testified on Tuesday that he heard the gunshots from Camac Street, then he saw a man wearing a black mask and a dark jacket run into an SUV, which drove away. Houck wrote the tag number down. Police allegedly matched the tag to Nicodemo's Honda Pilot and arrested Nicodemo at his home later that day.

"Honestly, when it happened I was pretty scared," Houck said. "Nothing like that ever happened to me before, I've never seen a guy die in front of me.

"I looked to the left, seen that guy laying down, just put it together, and had to do the right thing," Houck said when asked why he memorized the tag.

But defense attorney Brian McMonagle said that Nicodemo was just in the wrong place at the wrong time — and was held hostage by the shooter for three minutes, who stuffed a revolver wrapped in a fleece in Nicodemo's car and then fled.

Anatomy of a murder

Gino DiPietro, 52, was pronounced dead at 3:21 p.m. on Thursday, Dec. 12, 2012.

- He was shot multiple times in the back.
- Reports say DiPietro was targeted because he served as a federal informant on his cousin Victor DiPietro.
- Prosecutor Brian Zarallo said the motive for the murder is unknown.

"If Anthony Nicodemo was planning to harm this man, would he drive a car with his tag to a neighborhood that he grew up in ... to commit this crime?" McMonagle

Some bus TLC. SEPTA breaks ground today

SEPTA officials and local politicians are scheduled to break ground at 9:30 a.m. today on a new project to improve operations at the 23rd and Venango "bus loop" — where several bus routes terminate and begin again.

Manny Smith, SEPTA spokesman, said the transit agency has funds left over from the 33rd and Dauphin renovation project.

"We were able to redeploy those funds to other bus loops," he said.

Planned improvements include a boarding island for Route 56 passengers, bicycle parking, improved lighting, repaved pedestrian sidewalks, new bus driveways, repainted crosswalks and new landscaping.

The loop, which serves more than 5,000 riders daily, will be closed for the duration of the project and riders will use nearby temporary stops. It's expected to provide a safer, more efficient experience for riders when complete.

"It is a busy end of the line for us," Smith said.

Improvements

- The 23rd and Venango bus loop project will cost $1.4 million, start in June and take about 10 months.
- Passengers will get a shelter and operators will get a building.

Artist who blew off hand charged

Douglas Ferrin, 54, the artist who blew off part of his hand last week, was charged Tuesday with "weapons of mass destruction," risking a catastrophe and failure to prevent a catastrophe, prosecutors announced.

PROVIDED

Ferrin, a realist oil painter whose work was once featured in a Society Hill gallery, reportedly was tinkering with an explosive device at his Germantown home around 4 a.m. on May 7, when the device exploded.

Ferrin reportedly has mental health issues and a fondness for explosives. He served six months in prison for dropping an M-80 firecracker in a Chester County pub men's room toilet in 2011, according to an interview he did with "The Art Room" blog.

Ferrin's hand injury was reportedly treated at Albert Einstein Medical Center after the explosion.

A nurse at the hospital refused to comment on Ferrin's condition and whether he was still hospitalized.

Bail is set at $500,000.

Police released video on Tuesday which captured the car involved in a Center City road rage incident on May 10.

The video shows a red Mitsubishi Eclipse, estimated to be a model from between 1995 and 1999, suspected of following another car from Fourth and Lombard streets last Saturday night to Center City around 7:30 p.m. and then shooting out the car's window, police said. The other car was driven by a woman, 28. There was another woman, 20, and a baby, 4, in the car. METRO

Philly PHLASH, the discount bus service which provides transportation to specific historical markers and tourist attractions, will most likely be around for another 10 years.

The buses known for its purple paint jobs weren't a yearly guarantee, until PHLASH received added funding from the state transportation funding bill passed recently.

"We felt like we made a compelling case that the PHLASH was not only a good visitor amenity but a great way to get people around the city in an economical way," said president and CEO Jim Cuorato.

The bus winds throughout Center City to 20 stops, mostly along Market Street and the Benjamin Franklin Parkway. The bus loop mainly visits parking garages designated for tourists who don't know the city well and want to visit popular landmarks.

Obama: Small window to get immigration reform done this year

Top priority. The comments signaled White House hope that reform can still pass this year.

Supporters of immigration reform marched from Union Station to The White House on May 1. / GETTY IMAGES

President Barack Obama said on Tuesday there was a small window of opportunity now to pass immigration reform in the House before Washington's attention turned completely to the November midterm elections.

The comments signaled White House hope that immigration reform, a top priority for the second-term president, still could be passed this year.

Obama has been pushing to revise immigration laws and create a pathway to citizenship for some 11 million undocumented residents, but a bill that passed the Democratic-controlled Senate has been stalled in the Republican-controlled House.

"We've got this narrow window. The closer we get to the midterm elections, the harder it is to get things done around here," Obama told a meeting of law enforcement leaders. "We've got maybe a window ... of two, three months to get the ball rolling in the House of Representatives."

As he has done before, Obama said he was willing to compromise on aspects of the bill, but he noted that "some pathway to citizenship" would be needed.

"We're not hell-bent on making sure that every letter of what's in the Senate bill is exactly what ultimately lands on my desk for signature," he said. REUTERS

'Bridgegate.' Christie aide 'shocked' to learn about gridlock scheme

New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie's spokesman testified on Tuesday he was shocked to learn that some of his former colleagues had organized traffic gridlock last year, apparently to retaliate against a political foe of the likely Republican presidential candidate.

Michael Drewniak, press secretary for the Christie administration, appeared before a bipartisan legislative panel in Trenton probing who was involved in the plan to jam traffic at the George Washington Bridge and why the apparent abuse of power was able to occur.

Run for the White House

Christie, mulling a possible 2016 run for the White House, also has strongly denied any knowledge of the "Bridgegate" scheme, but his poll numbers have suffered since the scandal broke late last year.

He told the panel that he had no knowledge or involvement in this "strange, unnecessary and idiotic episode that brought us here today."

The shutdown of lanes leading to the bridge in Fort Lee, New Jersey, over four days last September caused massive traffic tie-ups in the borough. REUTERS

MERS virus. Health workers fall ill after exposure to patient

Two health workers at a hospital in Orlando, Florida, who were exposed to a patient with Middle East Respiratory Syndrome have begun showing flu-like symptoms, and one of the two has been hospitalized.

Officials at the Dr. P. Phillips Hospital said on Tuesday the two health care workers were exposed to the patient — the second confirmed case of MERS in the U.S. — in the emergency department before it became clear that he might be infected with the often deadly virus.

The second health care worker is being isolated in his home and watched for signs of infection.

Hospital and local officials said that the MERS patient, also a health-care worker, had made a visit last week to the Orlando Regional Medical Center to accompany another person who was having a medical procedure. The MERS patient was symptomatic at the time but did not seek treatment.

Health officials stress that MERS is not a risk to the general public, but it does spread among health-care workers who have close contact with infected patients. REUTERS

Coal mine collapse kills two miners

A West Virginia coal mine collapsed, killing two miners during an operation that had been one of the most hazardous in the industry, officials and the company said on Tuesday.

A "ground failure" caused the Patriot Coal Corp.'s Brody Mine No. 1 to collapse at about 8:30 p.m. on Monday, trapping two miners, the federal Mine Safety and Health Administration said in a statement.

The miners, both from West Virginia, were identified as Eric Legg, 48, of Twilight and Gary Hensley, 46, of Chapmanville. The men's bodies have been recovered.

"We express our deepest sympathies to Eric's and Gary's families, friends and co-workers," Mike Day, Patriot's executive vice president for operations, said in a statement. REUTERS

Explorers. Shipwreck found off Haiti could be Columbus's Santa Maria

A shipwreck found off the north coast of Haiti could be the 500-year-old remains of the Santa Maria, which led Christopher Columbus's famed voyage to the New World, according to a team of marine explorers.

"All the geographical, underwater topography and archaeological evidence strongly suggests that this wreck is Columbus' famous flagship, the Santa Maria," Massachusetts marine investigator Barry Clifford said in a press release on Tuesday.

Santa Maria circa 1900

DEA PICTURE LIBRARY / GETTY IMAGES

Clifford, who led a reconnaissance expedition to the site, planned to hold a press conference this morning at the Explorer's Club in New York City to announce the discovery.

The Santa Maria was one of a fleet of three vessels that departed Spain in 1492 looking for a shorter route to Asia. The ship, after arriving near the Bahamas, drifted into a reef and had to be abandoned. Columbus ordered sailors to build a fort nearby before taking the remaining two ships back to Spain to report his findings.

Clifford and his team first discovered the wreck in 2003, but were unable to identify the ship. REUTERS

Tippled crown. US is world's No. 1 wine market as France abstains

The United States became the world's biggest market for wine last year, beating France into second place for the first time as consumption slides in the country long seen as its natural home and Americans develop a greater taste for it.

U.S. consumers bought 29.1 million hectoliters of wine in 2013, a rise of 0.5 percent on 2012, while French consumption fell nearly 7 percent to 28.1 million hectoliters, the International Vine and Wine organization (OIV) said Tuesday.

U.S. drinkers are, however, still way behind in terms of consumption per head.

According to per capita figures that date from 2011, the average French person still goes through almost 1.2 bottles a week, about six times more than the average American. Nevertheless, the downward trend in consumption through recent years is fairly dramatic in Europe's wine-drinking heartlands.

"In countries such as France, Italy and Spain, people used to drink a lot of wine, but consumption habits are changing," OIV director general Jean-Marie Aurand said at a news conference in Paris.

"We drink less wine by volume, [and] more quality wine. And there is also competition from other drinks, such as beer."

"In the U.S., it's different; they are starting from a lower level per capita, so they have a tendency to consume more and more, notably quality wine," he said.

The OIV said the fall on the French wine market last year was exaggerated by an adjustment in its statistical data. REUTERS

By the numbers

France, the world's third largest wine producer behind Italy and Spain, saw its consumption per capita fall more than 20 percent between 2002 and 2011 to 46.4 liters per year.

Over the same period, U.S. consumers raised their consumption by nearly 17 percent to 9.1 liters per person per year.

Solange vs. Jay Z: The aftermath

I'm not going to lie. This item is mostly an excuse to once again watch the amazing footage of Solange Knowles attacking her brother-in-law, Jay Z, after the Met Gala. I know every single red-blooded American watched it at least three times on Monday (once when the news broke on TMZ, once when the extended footage came out, and once later to point out to your friends how Beyonce just stood there) but it will never be enough.

Anyway, apparently Solange was on a bit of a tear all evening. Earlier at the same Met Gala after-party at The Standard hotel, Solange yelled at designer Rachel Roy, sources tell Us Weekly. One source says Beyonce "got in the middle of" her sister's fracas with Roy; another source said Roy was just one of a group Solange harangued.

This still doesn't tell us what had Solange so riled up. However, she did delete all of her shots of Beyonce from her Instagram account yesterday, save for this one from 2013, with music video director Melina Matsoukas. What does it all mean?! Alas, we do not know. The Jay/Bey PR machine is just too powerful to let the real story out. I guess the only comfort we have in these troubled times is to watch the footage again.

This is the only photo of Beyonce on her sister's Instagram account?! Oh, the horror! / INSTAGRAM

FILM, MUSIC AND THEATER SHAKE-UPS

The collaboration between Tigre Hill and Larry Kane is in flux. The controversial film director, who did the Mumia Abu-Jamal doc "The Barrel of a Gun," and the anchorman-turned-author recently began a documentary based on Kane's time as the lone journalist on The Beatles' 1964-65 tours of America. Last week, Kane was contacted by name-above-the-title filmmakers doing a studio-funded film about the tours and was invited to participate — but he's contractually bound to reveal nothing. Hill says he'll get a consultant credit on the larger project and the producers may use his already-shot Kane footage.

Philly hasn't heard from its favorite son of raunchy electro hip-hop Naeem Juwan, aka Spank Rock, for a while, but his label's publicist just dropped word that a new single, "Gully," will be out May 20, produced by Boys Noize. No word on when an album is due.

West Philly thespian Colman Domingo was ready to make his hometown debut for the Philadelphia Theater Company's "A Boy and His Soul" on May 23 — until he got what he called a "once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to portray Rev. Ralph Abernathy" in a film about Martin Luther King. PTC is filling the gap by starting Colin Quinn's "Unconstitutional" earlier than planned, on June 13.

Seen on the scene

- After Wendy Williams finished co-hosting Fox's "Good Day Philadelphia" with Mike Jerrick last Friday, the talk hostess hit Geno's Steaks for fries and a "wiz wit" cheesesteak.
- The night before attending the 58th annual Daisy Day luncheon at the Hyatt at the Bellevue to benefit Children's Hospital of Philadelphia, designer and "Project Runway" judge Zac Posen supped at Positano Coast with model Anna Cleveland.
- BiblioBash 2014 at the Parkway Central Library's Skyline Room honored Deputy Mayor Michael DiBerardinis for contributions to keeping Philly's libraries open during tough economic times. Meanwhile, downstairs at the library, I spied Larry Gold (string arranger to Gamble & Huff and The Roots) and activist Sister Mary Scullion; she's just off the celebration of Project HOME's 25th anniversary with Jon Bon Jovi.

LISA WEIDENFELD

Interview.

Elizabeth Olsen's first monster movie is an actual monster movie: "Godzilla."

"I wasn't a big Godzilla person," Elizabeth Olsen confesses. She had seen Roland Emmerich's campy reboot from 1998, starring Matthew Broderick, and had some familiarity with the old Japanese imports. "I think I learned from [them] how funny dubbing could be," she recalls. "I didn't actually understand what Godzilla actually represented in the Japanese version."

And yet the actress's first giant movie, after a string of acclaimed turns in independent and smaller films, notably "Martha Marcy May Marlene," is the new reboot of "Godzilla." Admittedly, it's not just junk; like the 1954 original, it's a serious film that depicts destruction with realism. "The young kids can see it and go, 'Wow, that's crazy!'" she says. "Everyone else can see hints of a larger point."

And she's glad she got what she expected. "It's always been what they said

Acclaimed indie film actress Elizabeth Olsen makes her monster budgeted movie debut in "Godzilla." / AFP, GETTY IMAGES

Twin powers activate

From husband to brother

Olsen has already reunited with her "Godzilla" husband, Aaron Taylor-Johnson, on another film, "Avengers: Age of Ultron," out next summer. The twist? They play twins. "You're supposed to know your twin super-well, so I'm glad we had one film on us before we started with 'Avengers,'" she says. "It actually worked out pretty amazingly."

it was going to be, which is quite phenomenal. ... It was far more collaborative than I assumed a big film like this should be. If there was dialogue Aaron [Taylor-Johnson, who plays her husband] and I couldn't work through, we'd workshop it."

It was also Olsen's first experience with "pre-vids," animated videos made before scenes are shot, to give actors a general sense of the effects they'll act with. "They're these basic, funny cartoons of people making terrible reactions to things," she says.

Still, acting with such a big budget for effects wasn't a walk in the park.

"You think it's going to be make-believe, then it's pouring rain, and you have to get a verbal cue to look down to whatever's going to be there. It's very technical. It's a little scary."

Her director, Gareth Edwards, helped. He started as an effects guy and took those skills along when he went on to do the indie creature feature "Monsters."

"I think what happens with these big films is studios are trying to get these really great storytellers — these small film directors — into these bigger movies," says Olsen. "But sometimes they don't have the language to speak with special effects. And he understood that right off the bat. His focus is on story-driven films, so working with him is incredibly collaborative."

So her first giant movie worked out well. "I was actually shocked that I wanted to cry twice in this film," she reveals. "Usually I'm quite removed. I'm very critical if I'm in them."

SEPTA: CELEBRATING 50 YEARS

ITALY IN THE '60S CAN BE A FUN ROAD TRIP

'Il Sorpasso'

The Criterion Collection
$39.95

The gauntlet is thrown early in 1962's "Il Sorpasso." A brash, 40-something alpha male named Bruno (Vittorio Gassman) has just essentially bullied Roberto (Jean-Louis Trintignant), a meek law student, to abandon his studies and hit the road. Bruno brings up "The Eclipse," Michelangelo Antonioni's acclaimed study of alienation in modern Italy. It put him to sleep, Bruno admits. In fact, it probably put many original viewers of "Il Sorpasso" to sleep.

But this isn't mere anti-intellectualism. In fact, poke at "Il Sorpasso" and it pokes back. Bruno and Roberto's jaunt, speeding from place to place in a convertible, doesn't scream satire. And yet it takes Italy's temperature, as "La Dolce Vita" did two years prior. It comes to a similar conclusion: that Italy in the 1960s is partying now but the good times will soon end.

Jean-Louis Trintignant and Vittorio Gassman hit the road in the 1962 Italian comedy "Il Sorpasso." / THE CRITERION COLLECTION

It's just more lighthearted about it. This is a classic tale of an extrovert coaxing an introvert out of his or her shell, one of the most common tropes in comedy. But Bruno is if anything a mega-extrovert: He's loud and dense and easily distracted and proud of the things he doesn't know. He even accidentally hits on his loving daughter, shortly before making an unsuccessful pass at his ex-wife. But he's not a villain or particularly evil; he's even charming. Gassman's performance is not alternately charismatic and monstrous but both at the same time. Given his age, he'd usually be the last guy at the party, but the party's still in full, reckless swing.

Fits of profundity are woven into the film's fabric, arising during bits of downtime. It's easy to get caught up in "Il Sorpasso," but looking back on it after it's over, it seems even better than it did at the time.

Create the window

Make sure to plan ahead when deciding which plants to put together in your window box. / PHOTOS.COM

Greenery. Don't be fooled – window boxes are as tricky as a traditional garden. Avoid these common newbie mistakes.

On the surface, window boxes seem perfect for the first-time gardener. They're apartment-friendly, low-investment and, if all else fails, easy to unhook and hide in the closet until next year. But in reality, container gardens are like college dorms: crowded, fussy, unstable little ecosystems requiring specialized care, constant vigilance and the occasional extermination.

Because an RA isn't in this year's garden budget, we hit up Patricia Schrieber, director of education at the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society, for some pro tips.

Select compatible plants

When space is tight and resources are communal, it's important that the plants you select are on the same page. "Whenever you grow in containers, you have to grow plants that have similar needs — it's impossible to have plants in the same container that like different water and different sun," says Schrieber. Her advice: Before you hit the nursery and get distracted by the flashiest blooms and this year's trends, decide on your color palette and then choose varieties that play nice.

Know your dirt

"Get soil that supports the type of plants you have," says Schrieber. "Different plants need different soil and moisture contents." If that's more research than you're prepared to do, skip the big-box store and make some knowledgeable friends at your local garden center.

Build in breathing room

Everyone wants lush window boxes overflow-

Don't forget

Three Essentials

What makes a head-turning window box? That would be the holy trinity of container gardening: filler (leafy plants that flesh out the box), spiller (those coveted cascading vines) and thriller (tall flowering plants).

PLUS

For beginners

Still wary?

If you're a novice window-boxer, try your hand at succulents, Schrieber suggests. These hearty plants are accustomed to growing in harsh, dry environments and will forgive weekend trips, forgotten fertilizer and garden-variety neglect.

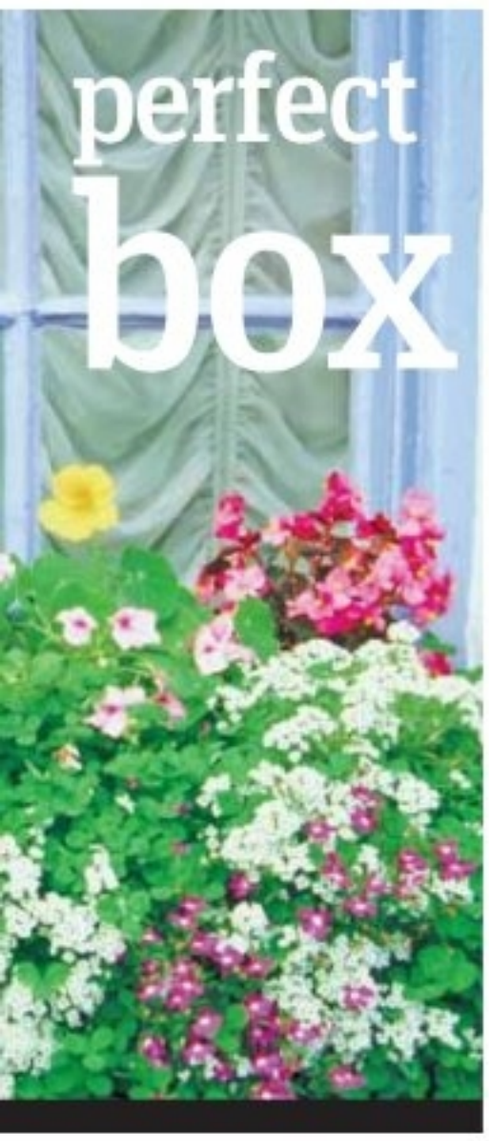
perfect box



ing with blooms. But, Schrieber warns, plants grow (well, that's the idea, anyway) and it's important not to crowd them. Plant your boxes sparingly to account for how big they'll be in a month, or be prepared to take some out later.

Give them the good stuff

Window box gardens can't pull extra nutrients from the surrounding soil, and fertilizers tend to leak out the bottom. With that in mind, Schrieber suggests showing a little extra love and fertilizing with each watering.

Peruse for pests

No garden is too small or too high for a hungry bug. "No matter where you grow, you're always going to have pests," says Schrieber. "Carefully check once a week for any damage." The good news: On such a tiny scale, you can just flick off the offending critters.

Charles James brings elegance back to the Met

See more at www.metro.us

New exhibit.
Bye-bye punk, hello sophistication.

Caped crusaders, supermodels, punks, Prada: These are just a few of the Metropolitan Museum's Costume Institute's recent exhibition subjects. So visitors to the Met's annual fashion show might be disappointed to discover a dearth of mannequins flipping the bird, Kate Moss holograms or Batman suits on display this year. Instead, the Institute has decided to debut its newly renovated galleries with an old-school, no-frills retrospective on a little-known mid-century designer: Charles James.

"Charles James: Beyond Fashion," which opens to the public Thursday, features 65 of the American couturier's dazzling, sculptural works of art — ball gowns that are feats of mathematical engineering and imagination — and puts James back in the ranks of fashion's geniuses.

Cecil Beaton took this stunning photograph of a model in a Charles James gown. / PROVIDED

He began his career as a milliner in 1926, designing hats for ladies of Chicago's high society. Throughout the late '20s and '30s, he moved from New York to Paris to London, honing his dressmaking techniques and developing the pieces that would serve as his signatures: the wrap-over trouser skirt (like a proto-skort, but way more chic), the Taxi dress (a spiral-cut garment like a proto-wrap dress) and the va-va-voom Sirene dress with the fabric ruched to evoke skeletal or reptilian forms. (The Met has examples of all.)

But it wasn't until the late '40s and early '50s — after moving to New York and teaming up with makeup mogul Elizabeth Arden, socialite Millicent Rogers and burlesque performer Gypsy Rose Lee, all of whom would become clients — that James became a star, thanks to his virtuosic gowns. The exhibition's cavernous main gallery includes 15 of them.

James shut down his workshop and showroom in 1958. He was difficult, depressed and uncompromising; he couldn't keep up with the demands of the industry. By the time he died in 1978, he had a few clients but was living in squalor. Now, this genius — who Balenciaga once called the greatest couturier in the world — is getting his due.

Sidescroller. Is the PlayStation Vita finally back from the dead?

Sony's portable powerhouse, the Vita, never really caught on. The lack of titles and stiff competition from Nintendo (not to mention the mobile market) made the system a non-starter. But the digital winds are changing. The company just launched a slimmer, lighter version of the hardware with a lower price point. Oh yeah, there are also more games now. Better late than never!

"Borderlands 2" is like "Halo" meets "Diablo," and it looks great on the PS Vita. / PS VITA

'Borderlands 2'

System: PS Vita

A point-by-point remake of a recently released console gem that you can play on the toilet? That's been the promise of Vita since day one, and only now is it being properly realized. "Borderlands 2" is an utterly massive open-world FPS with a great story, and it's all there in the palm of your hand.

If you've played the series before, you know that loot is the name of the game. It's essentially a mix of shooters like "Halo" and rogue-like treasure grabbers like "Diablo." The graphics look great on the Vita, although some of the menus are small and tough to read. Also, with fewer buttons compared to the 360 or PS3, some of the control mapping gets cramped. Still, it's a marvelous effort.

'Persona 4: Golden'

System: PS Vita

"Persona 4: Golden" is another remake of a console classic, this one dating back to the PS2. However, this isn't a straight-up port. The game has been updated with care, with HD visuals, new characters and well-implemented touchscreen support.

How to describe this bizarre game to newbies? It's a turn-based RPG mixed with a high school simulator. Yes, you read that right. Sure, it's ridiculous. It's also really well-written and well-acted, with all of the drama and pathos one would expect from a good TV series. (It's more "Buffy the Vampire Slayer" than "Dawson's Creek.") Incidentally, the game is stuffed to the brim with content. You could play for 100 hours and not see everything. LAWRENCE BONK

Bio. Geneticist explains how genes change our lives — and vice versa

Back in biology class, your teacher likely implied that your genetic destiny was fixed at birth. But now, new information about genes has shown that they affect your life after you're out of the womb.

"Inheritance," by geneticist Dr. Sharon Moalem, describes how the study of genetics has changed and what it might mean for the future of humanity.

Take identical twins, for example. Identical twins with the same DNA can often be radically different.

Moalem / PROVIDED

"What they do with that DNA in their life can be radically different," Moalem says. "Exercise, for example, can trigger genes in your muscles."

Similarly, smoking tobacco triggers certain genes that help in the breakdown of caffeine. This decreases the effects of caffeine on smokers.

"There's an interplay between our environment and what we do that impacts our genes," he says. "How we play it is up to us."

What it means for you

The future of medicine?

Angelina Jolie discovered she carried the BRCA1 gene, heightening her risk of breast cancer. Her decision to have a double mastectomy all but eliminated that risk.

"She became a pre-vivor," Moalem says. "That never existed before."

But as genetic screenings become more common and less expensive, new privacy risks open up. And as they become more common in prenatal care, parents may be able to make new kinds of decisions.

"If you don't want to have a child with dyslexia, you can screen for that," Moalem says. MAX PRINZ

The homeless should be so lucky

Re: 'The homeless aren't a joke' (Metro, May 13)
Kudos to fellow reader Chris Berg for chastising Metro for its "joke" comparing Jake Gyllenhaal to the homeless.
As a veteran and former member of the New York City homeless population, I can assure the editors and readers of Metro that Gyllenhaal did NOT look homeless. He was smiling and dressed comfortably inside an air-conditioned sports arena sitting next to two multimillionaire entertainers watching a sporting event. The homeless should be so lucky.

The thought police are listening

If a millionaire such as LA Clippers owner Donald Sterling can get caught saying racist comments in a setup, what makes you think regular people like you won't be set up? Everyone is subjected to racism. If you're working in an organization where most of the workers are a certain color, do you really think those workers won't set you up, even though some of them might have gotten away with it themselves just for comedy material?

Eagles title odds dropping

After releasing DeSean Jackson and collecting a questionable stockpile of players in last week's draft, Bovava, a Las Vegas sports betting organization, has given the Eagles 22-1 odds to win the Super Bowl. This is the ninth best in the NFL, and three spots worse than a month and a half ago.

True homecoming for Trout's return to Philly

MLB. The pride of Millville, New Jersey, played his first game as a pro in Philadelphia last night.

Mike Trout finished second in the AL MVP voting in each of the last two seasons. / GETTY IMAGES

Mike Trout is finally back home.

After becoming one of the most impressive and most talented big leaguers in recent memory, the 22-year-old played his first game in Philadelphia on Tuesday, just over 40 miles from his hometown of Millville, New Jersey, and did it in front of a home crowd — literally.

More than 6,000 people traveled those 40-plus miles to Citizens Bank Park from his hometown, including family members, former teammates and coaches, and even the mayor of the town (who tossed the ceremonial first pitch).

"My phone was definitely blowing up this morning," Trout said before Tuesday's game. "Good thing it was on silent or I'd have been woken up at 8 o'clock. I am sure I'll see some people in the stands tonight that will jump out to me."

Trout was there in downtown Philly when the Phillies won the World Series in 2008, just like all the other fans. And he will be in center field while some of his childhood heros are at the plate during the two-game set.

"It's going to be something special," Trout said Tuesday afternoon. "To think I would be here playing high school ball just a couple years ago, and now playing for my first time here, not actually watching the games but playing the games. I'm not sure how I will react to it. It's going to be some special feelings. I'm just going to go out there and play my game to help the Angels."

Trout was also excited to be able to give the Millville High School baseball team an opportunity to take batting practice with him and his teammates.

"If I got a chance to come on the field for batting practice as a high school kid it would be an unbelievable experience to be on the same field as a professional baseball player," he said. "It's definitely going to mean a lot to them. It's nice to give back to the kids."

Trout's Philly ties run deep, and the two-time AL MVP runner up plans to build a home in South Jersey. He also plans to keep paying for Eagles season tickets.

"I'm definitely a season-ticket holder," Trout said. "I'm a huge Eagles fan. I was going to go to their practice today, but I got in late [last night]. I get up and cheer a little bit. I get into the games and if they get beat it's tough. It's fun to go to their games, for sure."

Trout will be an Angel until at least 2020, when his recently inked contract runs out. But when he spoke to the Philadelphia media Tuesday afternoon, he didn't deny his desire to someday play for his hometown team.

"My parents and my girlfriend, they are big Phillies fans," Trout said with a smile. "When I call from the West Coast they are always watching the Phillies games. … When the time comes we'll see (about playing in Philly)."

Quoted

"It's always fun to play against guys you watched growing up. It's going to be special just to be here and. ... to actually play a game instead of sitting in the stands and watching them."

John Hackworth and the Union haven't won a game for nearly a month. / GETTY IMAGES

Hackworth's job could be on thin ice

MLS. Union manager John Hackworth is starting to feel the heat during a long winless streak.

Toward the end of the Union's 1-0 loss to D.C. United this past weekend, a faint chant had started among Union fans. When the match was over, the faint chant became a noticeable roar in PPL Park, a roar Union management surely took notice of.

The fans chanted "fire Hackworth" in response to the Union's now ninth straight match without a win, a franchise record. Although Union manager John Hackworth is as well-respected as they come in the locker room and in the media, there's a certain point in any franchise where management may have to sit down and evaluate what's in the team's best interest.

That time is now for the Union.

The Union (1-5-5) haven't won a match since March 15. The tactical moves that Hackworth has made this season like drafting goaltender Andre Blake and trading forward Jack McInerney to the Montreal Impact for forward Andrew Wenger have made little to no impact on the team's success this season.

The Union as a team have scored just twice in their past five matches, which were netted as an own goal and a penalty kick. They haven't scored on the offensive attack since April 12.

Still, players are backing Hackworth and will continue to stand behind their coach no matter what happens.

"I'm sure the coaches would love to be able to sub themselves on the pitch, but they can't," said midfielder Maurice Edu, regarding the chants toward Hackworth. "All they can do is prepare us well during the week, get us motivated before the game, get us motivated at halftime. It's up to us to go out there and perform. It's unfair."

The Union face defending champion Sporting KC (5-2-2) tonight in Kansas City. In their last meeting back in October, KC helped eliminate the Union from playoff contention with a 2-1 victory at PPL Park.

The game will air at 8:30 p.m. on Comcast SportsNet.

More trouble

Union might be without a key player for long time

On Monday, Union midfielder Maurice Edu was named to the USMNT 30-man roster in preparation for the 2014 World Cup in Brazil.

He'll likely miss the next two weeks of action for the Union and, as a fringe selection to the final 23-man team, could miss up to a month more when action gets underway on June 12.

Edu has been the most successful of Hackworth's acquisitions this season.

He's tied for the team lead in goals with two and has been a defensive force in the midfield.

Ibanez makes first trip to Philly

It wasn't just Mike Trout who was excited to travel to Citizens Bank Park again on Tuesday. So was former Phillies slugger Raul Ibanez.

"He's just a big kid," Trout said. "He loved it in Philly, he always tells me when I ask him about it. He loves it here [Philly]."

Ibanez has played for the Yankees and Mariners as well since leaving Philadelphia. EVAN MACY

MLB power rankings | by Ryan Hannable

No. 1

Giants (25-14)

For the first time this season we have a No. 1 team not from Milwaukee as the Giants have been on a tear of late, winning seven of their last 10 games. Coming into the year, it was well known how good their pitching would be, but it's been their 4.18 runs per game, the third-best in the NL, as the big surprise.

No. 2

Brewers (24-14)

Milwaukee has lost six of its last 10 as its offense has calmed down recently. The Brewers are now seventh in the NL in runs per game at 4.03.

No. 3

Athletics (24-15)

Oakland has regained its form and is back to being the best team in the American League. Their plus-62 run differential is the best in all of baseball.

No. 4

Rockies (23-17)

Colorado can certainly score runs, as it has plated 230 runs so far this season and is the only NL team to surpass the 200 mark.

No. 5

Tigers (22-12)

Detroit has won seven of its last 10 games to open up a 5 1/2-game lead in the AL Central. The Tigers are the only team with a positive run differential.

No. 6

Braves (21-16)

After falling out of first place in the NL East for a short time, the Braves have regained the top spot by sweeping the Cubs over the weekend.

No. 7

Dodgers (21-19)

After getting off to a fast start, the Dodgers have been stuck in neutral for the past few weeks, playing .500 ball.
